More Transfers Abolished.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company yesterday filed with the Public Service Commission the following announcement of the abolition on August 1 of the following transfer privileges between elevated and surface lines, in addition to those already named:

"From the Fifth avenue elevated to the Fifth avenue trolley at Thirty-sixth street. From the Lorimer, Gates-Prospect, Nostrand-Prospect and Tompkins avenue lines to the Brighton Beach elevated line at Prospect Park station.

"Transfers between the Brighton Beach elevated line and the Flatbush avenue surface line will be restricted to use for a continuous trip in one general direction. It is at the present time possible to reverse direction on such transfers."

back rests were intact and the only visible sign of the battering the craft must have received coming over the stony fall of the thirty foot dam was a dent in the bow. The police at first were inclined to doubt that the cance could have taken such a plunge and come out so well, but Fred Harris, the girl's brother, who went to Walker's barn to examine it, was inclined to think it might have taken the drop, for it was built of tough spruce and had been newly fixed up and painted a short time before. At any rate Harris declared that he would not doubt Decker's story on the strength of the appearance of the cance. sound of the rushing water of the dam on Pompton Lake over which, Sunday night, Mabel Harris of Pompton went to her death, the many members of the Harris family clustered on the lawn in front of the white house where they live, and a used all day yesterday the tragedy that had come to them.

Decker and Miss Harris were said to be very fond of each other and would, it was rumored, have been married before but that they lacked money. The young man had recently, however, obtained a chapiful and the wedding was

Monday night as a material witness The prosecutor, declaring that there was no evidence on which to hold the boy, said that he would appear in the Court of Paterson this morning Magistrate Frank Ramano for arge. Yesterday afternoon he out to the Harris home and told sem that in his opinion Decker was ulity of nothing worse than hiding the let of Mabel's death through fright.

"There won't be any trial," he said afterward to reporters. "There is noth-ing to base a trial on." ing to base a trial on."

"Why did Decker tell so many conflicting stories" Mr. Dunn was asked.
"Why did he say at one time, when questioned by Chief of Polics Magee, that he and Miss Harr's grounded the cance on the shores of the lake above the dam and went to sleep and he was only awakened to find himself struggling in the water below the dam: a another time that they carelessly drifted too near the dam and went over; at an-

However, the quarrel doesn't seem to have been serious, for the two spon patched it up and took the cance, Helen and her friend deciding that they preferred a longer walk to going boating. Decker declares positively that there was no quarrel, and in the hours he has spent in the jail he has muttered over and over:

Mabel."

His stery is that on "coming to" and finding himself struggling in the waters of the Ramapo below the dam, Mabel had disappeared. He had "a hard struggle," he says, to get to land; as soon as he succeeded he ran up and down the shores, calling. "Mabel, where are you?" At last, he says, he went to the Harris home and went to bed, hoping that in some way the girl had got out and had returned to the sanitarium.

It was not till next day, when the sanitarium doctor telephoned to ask why Mabel hadn't come to work, that Mra. Harris, struck with fear, sent for the Chief of Police and Decker was confronted with questioning and broke down and told the story. Then at once the march was begun, and the river below the dam and the lake above it were thoroughly dredged till, early yesterday morning, the body was discovered floating on the surface about half a mile below the dam.

Boys Ald in Search.

The work of dragging the lake and river was directed by Miss Haris's brothers, who showed the effects of the long strain yesterday. "I haven't been in bed since Sunday night," the uncle, A. H. Storms, remarked, and that was true of all the family. Thirty Boy, Ecouts who are tenting on the shores of the lake helped in the search, as did a number of neighbors, and it was one of the latter, Edward Tours of Pompton, who found the body. His eye was caught by the girl's plaid dress as she floated slowly along the surface of the stream on whose brink she had doubtless played many times as a child, for she had lived in Pompton all of her short life.

Drawing the body ashore, Taura immediately notified the county authorities in Paterson, and the detectives and county Physician left for the scene. The cody was taken to Richards's morgue at diverdals, where the autopsy was held in he afternoon. It was a great relief to he mother, the Prosecutor said, when it ### was decided that there were no marks on the body to show death by violence. Prosecutor Dunn said there were a few bruises on the body, but they were such as might have resulted from her being thrown against the rocks in the passage down the river. There was no water in the lungs, and this at first gave rise to the belief that death did not result from drowning. However, the Prosecu-MINISTER BELIEVED DROWNED AT CONEY New Trials Denied to Phila-

from drowning. However, the Prosecu-tor said the girl probably fainted from fright before death came, and that this resulted in the closing of the air pas-ages so that water couldn't penetrate to the lungs. She still wore the clother which she set out for her walk with Decker from the sanitarium, except that she had no shoes on. This corroborates Decker's story that before they lay down to rest in the came they both took off their shoes to relieve their feet, weary with rambling in the woods.

Farmer Finds Cance.

Three hundred yards below the dam the cance was found a little later by Thomas Walker, a farmer—found aground, bottom up, on a rise in the middle of the river. The paddles and back rests were intact and the only vis-doubt Decker's story on the strength of the appearance of the canoe.

As it stands the happening is likely to remain a mystery, a gruesome mys-tery strangely out of tune with the love-job as chauffeur and the wedding was set for August 23.

As it stands the happening is likely to remain a mystery, a gruesome mystery strangely out of tune with the lovely, smiling country around Pompton Lake. The mystery is not lessened by the fact that several fishermen, one of them an uncle of the girl. James Storms, were plying their sport Sunday night from the bridge across the road not farbelow the dam, and all declare that they saw no cance fall over it nor did they hear any sound of secident.

However, the fishermen left the bridge about 1 o'clock Monday merning, and Edward Harris says it was near 2 when Decker returned to the house, so the tragedy may have happened after they would up their lipes and want home.

Schubert was an athlete. He first met his wife a year and a haif ago while she was employed at a Coney Island bathhouse which he patronized daily. They were married just before he enlisted as a private in a medical unit and salled for France. Schubert returned from France in November as a convalescent casual. He had been wounded in the right leg by shrapnel and gassed. He had been retained at the hospital as a patient but his general condition had been so good that he had been free practically to come and go as he pleased. He wore clerical garb.

Schubert was 29 years old. His wife, Sophia, is 23. She was highly nervous when she visited the Coney Island police station and the police found it impossible to get details of her own and her husband's past lives. Her thoughts appeared to be dominated by the fact that a warning against her husband's fondness for swimming had come to him in a dream.

Elaborate plans for their entertain-ment are being prepared by the State Department, but details have not yet "One day about two weeks ago my husband told me of a terrible dream of the night before," Mrs. Schubert said. PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—The Supreme Parallel Ideas and Expressions Found in Emma Goldman's Writings.

Automobile Man Cannot Read, Charges Attorney, but Counsel Deny It.

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., July 30 .-Deadly parallels were read to-day in the Ford-Chicago Tribune $1,000,000 libel suit by Elliott G. Stevenson, attorney for the defence. They were the utterances of Emma Goldman and utterances of Henry Ford.

William A. Dunning, professor em eritus of History and Political Science at Columbia University, was on the stand all day and admitted that there were many points of resemblance in the many ideas under consideration.

At one stage of cross-examining in fact, Attorney Stevenson read passages without giving the author's name, and in several instances Prof. Dunning thought the writings attributed to Mr. Ford were those of Emma Goldman, whom he considered the world's foremost anarchist.

The witness said that Mr. Ford called "slaughter." So did Em war "slaughter." So did Emma Gold-man. Ford was quoted as saying that war would cease when people refused to go to war to satisfy private greed. Emma Goldman said people ought to refuse to go to war at the behest of their rulers. She also called the professional soldier a murderer, while Ford was quoted as saying that the word "murderer" should be embroidered across the breast of very soldier.

Miss Goldman said war was wholesale murder; Ford was quoted as saying that men praised the wholesale mur-derer and punished the retail murderer. Miss Goldman said wars were incited by business men seeking gains; Ford was quoted as saying that "two classes benefit by war, the munition makers and the money lenders."
Goldman ridiculed training camps and

Prof. Dunning admitted without hesitation that in some of their adhesions to war Goldman and Ford agree, although he had given expert testimony Tuesday that some of Ford's expressions precluded his being classed as an anarchist. "In their attitude toward the Govern-ment, however," said the witness, "their views are radically different," and "Not all of Emma Goldman's writings

Mr. Stevenson again brought in a reference to Mr. Ford's literacy, which he touched upon in examining the plaintiff. It came up, in connection with Tucker, an American anarchistic writer, who was said to have passed most of his life in the practice of law, because he could not make his books pay.
